

Scott Corridan transforms mountain home spaces

Staging a home to for that mountain get-away feel

Mountain home living room after reconfiguring the spaces and adding details.

TAHOE CITY, Calif., (Apr. 17, 2013) – Countless houses and cabins can be found throughout the peaks, canyons and valleys of the Carson area, but it takes an eye for design, creative flair and know-how to turn a dwelling into a true mountain home – a talent that designer Scott Corridan regularly puts to use.

Corridan can transform the look and feel of a home by “staging” it with minor tweaks and purchases and rearranging the furniture. He recently gave this mountain retreat a more in-depth makeover, to the tune of about $96,000.

The living room, which started off with an abundance of unused space, was reconfigured to create different zones that could be used for gathering, entertaining, viewing the outside, and reading.

The centerpiece of the master bedroom became the recessed area behind the headboard, which he lined with reclaimed barn-wood siding. The new bed is fully upholstered with headboard, footboard and side rails and exudes a pampered setting with a forward-stacked pillow arrangement. Walls were painted a soothing cocoa color and contemporary artwork and a three-legged side table were added to update the room. New bedding, pillows and an area rug further the room’s cohesion.

The second bedroom received an elegant cherry-wood bed and nightstand, updated wall art (keeping with the outdoor mountain theme), chair and bench – demonstrating that larger or more pieces don't necessarily clutter smaller areas. A fresh coat of paint, bedding, pillows, and an area rug anchor the room in its mountain setting.
